Zink the Zebra • ALL Grades

Once upon a time, a zebra named Zink lived in the Lipis jungle with her mother, her father, and her brother Fink. Zink was a normal zebra in every way. She had four legs, two ears, one nose, one mouth, one tail ... and spots. Because Zink has spots, she is treated differently by other zebras.

The story of Zink the Zebra, was written by Kelly Weil, a girl who had cancer. This insightful story tells not about the physical pain she experienced, but rather describes the pain she felt at being excluded. Using cancer as a metaphor for all differences – racial, religious or economic, real or perceived – the program invites participants to discover ways in which they are more alike than different.

This troop patch program is designed to: give girls a sense of understanding and appreciation for individual differences; develop girls' respect for others; teach girls compromise; practice life-long skills of dealing with people who are perceived to be different; and provide an opportunity for community service.

This program can be delivered in two or three meetings. To order, use the order form at left. Orders take about 4-6 weeks to process.
